LOUISE ENJOYS EXTREME TEST

British Female Rally Driver Louise Cook, 22, has been warming up for the season in one of the coldest places the extreme test place for any driver on the lakes and roads of Sweden.

Louise underwent further intense training over the two week period in -30°C conditions. In Britain the worlds stops with a sprinkle of snow and anything below 0. In Sweden it is just a way of life, a way of life that Louise adapted to easily and enjoyed its challenges. The extreme temperatures result in the nearby lakes of Lima in Sweden to freeze over to around 80cm in thickness. This is ample to hold the weight of a car provides one of the most difficult driving conditions literally driving on a giant ice cube.

"I love it in Sweden, it is so extreme, you have to adapt your driving style to be ahead of the car and think ahead a lot more, which is great training for the loose surface rallies."

Louise set some very impressive times against some proven talents and rally champions that also attended the training school.

"Its a big push to get the support I need now for the first round just 3 weeks away. I am ready as a driver, I just need the support financially still to get me through the first round."

round" said Louise.

Louise is flat on the throttle to get those 500 £50's she needs and we urge anyone with any type of business to jump on board what is the most cost effective promotion you will ever participate in with genuinely huge benefits.

"It's a real make or break time for me, I have worked my little pink socks off to get this far but I know that support is the only way of making things happen.

The £50 promotion is a really cost effective and though takes a massive amount of work provides massive pay back for everyone and a ridiculous level of promotion compared to investment to the lucky winners so please help me if you can I need your support."
